Gunpowder into Flour

Colonel John Winterson examined the rifle for the tenth time. Then he banded it back to Lieutenant Howard Ashley.

"I just can't wait until the Prince Albert Kid gets here," he said. "What is behind this rifle? How did it get into the hands of an Indian? The idea of several thousand redskins armed with effective rifles does not exactly hit me as something we desire to have in the future."

A sentry entered the officers' quarters and saluted his superior officer.

"The compliments of the Prince Albert Kid," he said. "He is outside with two men. Wants to see you at once."

"Tell him we are waiting for him," replied the Colonel. "Take care of their horses. Then have three more plates set up at the officers' mess."

The door to the officers' quarters opened. A man walked in and he was greeted warmly by the two officers. He wore a long Prince Albert coat. From his hips swung his two pearl handled Colt's .45. The famous lawman of the West took care of the introductions.

"Colonel Winterson and Lieutenant Ashley, I want to have you meet the two men who were kind enough to come with me. The man in uniform is Captain Juan Nogales of the 6th Mexican Cavalry. The other man is Peter Bowlands, probably the greatest gunsmith and expert in this country. Show him the rifle and he will tell you about it. I have explained how it got into our hands."

The gunsmith took the rifle and checked the action. He smiled as he returned the rifle to the Colonel.

"This rifle is the famous needle gun or Zundnadelgewehr which was adopted by Prussia in the year 1841," he began. "It was invented by Nikolaus Dreyse, a German gunsmith. He was first associated with a Parisian gunmaker by the name of Pauly. This man Pauly invented a primitive paper fulminating device which could be detonated by friction from a needle.

Nikolaus Dreyse worked on the idea of having a muzzle loading rifle which would fire a self contained combustible cartridge. It would have a primer that could be detonated by a spring propelled needle. It would enter the charge from the rear of the chamber. He worked and worked to perfect such a rifle. I guess you can say that when it was adopted in 1841, the Prussian Model was possibly the first true turn bolt breech loading rifle.

Now a word about the cartridge. It was of the combustible type with paper wrapping. The egg shaped lead bullet was seated in a carrier made from pressed paper. It contained the priming compound within a recess in the rear. And the charge of black powder was located in the rear of the primer.

The rifle proved satisfactory and was used during the Austrian War of 1866 as well as during the Franco-Prussian War of 1870. The fragile needle tended to break. And the action leaked gas at times. However in 1871, this rifle was discarded when the first metallic cartridge breech loader was officially adopted by the new German army."

"But how did this rifle get into the hands of an Indian?" demanded Colonel John Winterson. "From Prussia to the Indian territory is rather a long journey."

"I think I can help answer that," suggested Captain Juan Nogales. "Relations between our two governments were not always friendly. Need I say there are those living on the other side of the Rio Grande who still remember the war of 1846? On the other hand many of us are extremely grateful for the way the American government acted when Napoleon III tried to seat his nephew on a throne in Mexico.

We needed rifles. An offer was made to our government to sell us 5,000 of these discarded needle guns. They were more efficient than the cap and ball guns used by most of our troops. But not as efficient as the metallic cartridge rifles. We were about to purchase them when news reached us in Mexico City that there would be no objection to the purchase of modern rifles in the United States. So the deal fell through in regard to the needle guns.

It is my guess, and only a guess at that, in regard to these guns. The man, Hans Meister, must have contacted the Indians and offered to sell them the guns. They bought them. Now can you figure out why?"

"But why?" asked a puzzled Colonel. "To fight against us seems the evident answer. But why the needle guns."

"I can answer that," said the gunsmith. "It is illegal to sell rifles to the Indians in the United States. The few they have aren't any good without metallic cartridges. But notice this needle gun.

If the Indians can get black powder and primer powder, they could make a fairly efficient bullet. They need not have a metal case to hold the combination. They can use lead or silver for the bullet part."

"You know that the Indian who had this rifle came from Chief Long Hand's tribe," said the Colonel. "That means they are preparing for a war. It would set the Southwest ablaze and reach even across the Rio Grande. I will muster all my men and strike right at Long Hand's village."

"That's not the best solution," pointed out the Prince Albert Kid. "We want peace. True, Chief Long Hand has those rifles. But he hasn't gunpowder as yet. This Hans Meister is back in Mexico. He will buy the gunpowder and try to get it into the States."

"And we'll stop him," said the young Lieutenant.

"We won't," replied the famous lawman. "In fact, we will even help him get it across the Rio Grande. Captain Nogales and I have a plan. We are going to try it."

A week later, six covered wagons stopped at an inspection point on the Mexican side of the border.

"What have you?" demanded the Mexican custom official. "We wish to check what you are taking out of this country."

"Only flour," said Hans Meister. "There is a shortage of flour in the States. Here is my manifest showing that I bought 180 barrels of flour from Hosea Menors."

"Everything appears satisfactory," said the custom official. "However you and your drivers will have to spend the night in our barracks. We shall take care of your wagons and the horses. Seems there is fear of an Indian outbreak on the other side. You will have to wait until an armed party escorts you."

Hans Meister offered no protest. He didn't want any trouble with the border officials. At midnight, The Prince Albert Kid and several Mexican soldiers went to work. Quickly and efficiently they emptied the barrels of gunpowder and substituted something else. In the morning all the wagons were assembled and an armed guard protected them until they were on American territory. Then another armed group watched them for fifty miles. Soon Hans Meister was on his way to the Indian village.

Hundreds of Indians from all over the southwest gathered at the village. Colonel John Winterson waited exactly two weeks. Enough time for the Indians to start making bullets. Then he and four hundred mounted soldiers moved towards the village. When they arrived they noticed the sullen faces of the braves. The Prince Albert Kid spoke to the chief.

"We know that you bought rifles and you have made bullets which you intend to use. I wish to save the breaking of the peace. If you have any complaints then come to Fort Sill. The Colonel and I will listen. Then I will go to Washington and speak to the Great White Father."

"I have guns that will speak for me," said the Chief.

"Your guns have no tongues of fire," replied the famous lawman. "Have some of your braves shoot at targets. See if I speak an untruth."

Quickly the Chief ordered some of his braves to test their guns with the bullets they had made. Seven loaded their rifles and pulled the triggers. Nothing happened! There was surprise written all over the face of Chief Long Hand. He could visualize what might have happened had he gone into battle. But he was a smart man. He wasn't going to lose face. He raised his right hand. There was silence.

"The Red Man can take the path of peace or the path of war. I say we are brave. We take the path of peace. We will prove this by giving up our guns."

A week later the Chief and several of his sub-chieftains came to the Fort. Their complaints were adjusted satisfactorily. The Chief handed three loaves of bread to the Prince Albert Kid.

"They tell me that the man who sold me the guns is in prison. Give him this bread to eat. It came from the flour in the barrel. You are smart, oh, Man who keeps the Law. I think it was you who made gunpowder into flour."

APACHE lore

THE WHITE MEN IN THE SOUTHEAST HAD A LOT TO TEACH THE APACHES... BUT THEY LEARNED A LOT FROM THEM TOO! FOR INSTANCE, ON A LONG CHASE RELAYS OF APACHE WARRIORS COULD RUN DOWN THE SWIFTEST HORSE... ON FOOT!

IT WAS SIMPLE ENOUGH FOR THE INDIAN TO SURVIVE... WITH HIS MACHETE, HE CUT DEEP INTO WATER STORING CACTUS AND DRANK...

WARRIORS IN THE WATERLESS DESERT COULD APPARENTLY LIVE ON AIR! THE APACHES LIVED, WHILE THE MEN FIGHTING THEM DIED OF THIRST AND HUNGER!

FOR FOOD, THE APACHE KNEW WHERE TO FIND THE TINY ANIMALS OF THE DESERT... OR HE COULD SUBSIST ON LIZARD MEAT, CONSIDERED A DELICACY TODAY!

SIX - GUN HEROES

THE APACHE LIVED IN CLOSE HARMONY WITH THE DESERT ANIMALS! HE KNEW WHEN THEY SENSED APPROACHING DANGERS LIKE SANDSTORMS.....

THE WHITE MEN FIGHTING HIM DID NOT! THEY WERE CAUGHT IN THE STORM, THE WIND LASHED SAND CUTTING AND BLINDING THEM!

THE APACHES HAD OTHER SECRETS! THEIR MEDICINE MEN PERFORMED THEIR RITUALS TO LEARN WHERE THE HUNTING WOULD BE GOOD...

AND DIRECTED THE TRIBE TO A CERTAIN VALLEY WHERE THEY HADN'T HUNTED BEFORE!

IN A LAND WHERE SURVIVAL WAS ALMOST IMPOSSIBLE, THEY THROVE! ONLY THE WHITE MAN'S GERMS, THE WHITE MAN'S SOFT LIVING DEFEATED THEM!

NOT ALL THE APACHES SUCCEMIBD! TODAY, THERE ARE THOUSANDS LIVING IN THE MOUNTAINS ... LIVING AS THEIR ANCESTORS LIVED!
